BILL HISTORY

Russel Means is the most prominent American Indian leader in America today. In 1970 he founded AIM, the American Indian Movement, which has spearheaded the drive for Indian self-determination and self respect. He has involved himself over the years around the world, from leading the take-over at Wounded Knee in 1973, to being wounded in Nicaragua where he came out strongly against the Sandinista's slaughter of Indians. He has sought both the Republican and Libertarian nominations for President of the U.S. He is a powerful and intensely charismatic spokesman, not just for the Indian people who are even today threatened with annihilation and final subjugation, but openly for the freedom of all human beings from all forms of tyranny. He is currently the head of his organization FIFE, Freedom Is For Everyone, and is associated with the Advocates for Self Government in California. Russel Means is one of the most impassioned and persuasive advocates of liberty alive today, as well as being one of the most important figures in modern American Indian history. His unique point of view is one which could only enrich this University.

Radicals for Capitalism has secured Chem 140 on October 13, 1988, for this event. The lecture would begin at 7 p.m., and, with questions, is likely to last until 10 or later.

We are requesting money for advertising only.
