A BILL

BILL HISTORY

Pedro Archuleta is a representative of the indigenous people of Tierra Amarilla, New Mexico in their struggle to come to terms with the land rights question in New Mexico and the entire southwestern U.S.

Tierra Amarilla is right across the Colorado border in an area which was once Mexico. The land in dispute was given to the ancestors of the community as a collective land grant by the Mexican government. The recent conflict began when the land was fraudulently sold to a developing company by a man whose ancestors had never been part of that community.

Pedro Archuleta has been heavily involved with the struggle and is very familiar with the history of the area and with the history of indigenous people in the Southwest. Most of this history and culture does not appear in the history books or in the general experience of most C.U. students. Bringing this oral historian will provide a form of communication on issues of indigenous peoples that is rarely available. This kind of exchange could prove invaluable in broadening our knowledge by focusing on the history, traditions, and conflicts existing in our own back yards.
